Decreased overall survival and reduced progression-free survival of patients with advanced-stage non-small cell lung cancer treated with front-line weekly paclitaxel and carboplatin. The median survival of patients with advanced-stage non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) remains less than 15 months, even in the postplatinum setting. The first-line treatment of advanced-stage NSCLC has improved over the past few decades; however, the majority of first-line trials include at least some patients with good performance status, resulting in a selection bias for these patients with better outcomes. This study evaluates the outcomes of patients with advanced-stage NSCLC treated with front-line weekly paclitaxel and carboplatin. Data were collected retrospectively from seven consecutive trials conducted by the Southwest Oncology Group. From January 2000 to December 2005, 547 patients were enrolled on these trials. Among these, the median survival was 8.7 months (95% confidence interval [CI], 8.0-9.3 months), the median progression-free survival (PFS) was 4.1 months (95% CI, 3.8-4.4 months), and the overall response rate was 29.5% (95% CI, 26.6-32.5%). Multivariate analysis demonstrated that age, sex, stage, and performance status were independent predictors of both overall survival and PFS. When the 4bc0debe42
